

“Understanding Self-Determination”

SAVE THE DATE

Monday, October 24, 2011

11:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Embassy Suites, Newark, Delaware

Registration fee: $15 (scholarships available)

The Center for Disabilities Studies at the University of Delaware, with support from the State of Delaware Developmental Disabilities Council, is hosting a workshop that explores the issue of self-determination from the perspectives of parents and self-advocates, featuring talks by:

Sue Swenson, a leader of national organizations with a wealth of experience in disability-related issues including family support, inclusion, transition and public policy, who is the parent of an adult son with disabilities

Liz Weintraub, who has a long history of leadership in self-advocacy and has held many state and national organization board and advisory positions

The workshop will begin with lunch and conclude with a panel that includes the guest speakers, parents, self-advocates and professionals discussing a variety of scenarios that may arise relating to self-determination.

Funding for the Center for Disabilities Studies and the Developmental Disabilities Council originates from the Administration on Developmental Disabilities (ADD).

If you would like to receive an invitation for this workshop that includes further details and registration information, please send your name, place of employment, home or work mailing address, email address and phone number to:
