Adjunct Student Teacher Field Instructor – Middle School Social Studies
The School of Education seeks a qualified educator to supervise student teachers during their middle school social studies student teaching experience for the Fall 2018 semester, which begins on August 28, 2018 and ends on December 9th, 2018. Candidates should have a master’s degree or equivalent in education, have a minimum of three years of experience in middle school social studies, be knowledgeable about current best practices in social studies education, and have a teaching certificate in middle school social studies. Although this adjunct position is just for the fall semester, possibilities exist for a successful candidate to supervise student teachers in future semesters. Adjunct field instructors are paid per student along with travel expenses.

Responsibilities include supervising students in the field, providing written feedback after observations, conferencing with student teachers following observations, orienting clinical educators, creating improvement plans if appropriate, writing mid-term and final evaluations, participating in teacher candidate orientation and completing field instructor orientation prior to the start of the semester.
