Adjunct Faculty, Department of English

The English Department seeks qualified instructors of English 110: Seminar in Composition. ENGL110 is the only course required of all undergraduates at the University of Delaware. Its goals and outcomes are outlined at https://www.english.udel.edu/undergraduate/engl110/engl110-goals-practices.

Responsibilities
The successful applicant will be responsible for teaching a first-year composition course. There is no standard syllabus for ENGL110 so faculty members are responsible for developing their own syllabi and course materials in accordance with the programs goals and practices. A willingness to utilize active learning strategies is essential. Adjunct faculty must also be available for office hours outside of class as part of their agreement to teach ENGL110. Successful applicants also attend two program meetings at the beginning of both the fall and spring semesters, as well as have annual reviews with directors. These and other ongoing professional development opportunities are integral to our program and important to part-time faculty success.

Qualifications
Candidates should hold an MA in Rhetoric and Composition, English, or English Education. PhDs are preferred. Candidates must also have at least two years of experience teaching academic writing at the college level.

Compensation
These are part-time, non-benefitted positions. Rate of pay is based on level of education and experience.
